a reward for helping with the investigation. The public should be aware that bank regulatory agencies, financial institutions and police agencies never turn to the customers of a bank to withdraw personal funds or to get account information as part of any investigation.

When challenged, most con artists will move on to easier targets. Despite the impression they create, these con artists do not want to be your friend, they only want your money. The secret word is resolution.

Other scams making the rounds are:

INTERNET E-MAIL SCAM

You receive an e-mail verifying that your credit card account has been charged $453.29 for online purchases at www.sexymama.com. If you have questions you are instructed to call a toll-free telephone number. Of course, you never made such a purchase and cannot wait to call to complain about the charge. The only problem is that the number you are supposed to call is in the Caribbean or in the Middle East and is not toll-free.

Sometimes you will get put on hold or have to listen to a long recorded message while the meter is running at an exorbitant international rate.

SWEEPSTAKES

You've Just Won $25,000! Or a boat, or a car, or something else "valuable." So goes the pitch. But if you're asked to pay before you get your prize, it's a scam. Often these outfits claim the money is for shipping, taxes, or something like that, but legitimate
