ing of materials that can be moved online...we are all tightening our belts.

4. We are reducing overtime by an additional 3%.

• Here is the rationale for these proposed cuts and reductions:

- Crime is down.
- We received the COPS federal grant, and are on track with those new hires (40 in 2010 and possibly 10 in 2012).

- Additionally, there will be 45 officers coming back to sworn police positions. These are the officers that used to be assigned as School Resource Officers. They will be filling existing positions and vacancies (20 in 2011/25 in 2012). Ultimately, those positions will be cut from our head count and funding will be reduced.

- Increased community involvement with JSO, along with strong prosecution, is resulting in greater-than-national-average declines in crime and greater-than-national-average increases in our clearance rates. Our intelligence-led policing tactics, with emphasis on community problem solving, is having the desired effect in the community.

- I prevailed against the union in a court decision to expand the duties of the Community Service Officers. This allows us to free up the "guns and badges" to address serious crime

AND focus on their community problem-solving activities.

- Online police reporting of certain property crimes that have no suspect helps us achieve greater efficiencies, too. (Go to www.jaxsheriff.org and click on REPORT CRIME).

- Implementing our strategies for hiring and deploying, even under severe budget constraints, is being accomplished. Our goal all along has been to create "pro-activity time" for the police officers, rather than running from call to call, as we have done for years.

This proposal is fluid, discussions are ongoing, and NOTHING has been approved or voted on yet.

The secret word is proposal. I wanted to share this first proposal with you all, so you could see the gravity of the situation, and how diligently we are working on the budget.

I am confident that for this next year, we can sustain the great strides we have made and still do our part to make some cuts. In different circumstances I would tell you that NOW is not the time to slow down our long range plan for improving the police-to-citizen ratio, but the situation demands compromise and concessions, along with the continued thrift and constant scrutiny of our spending, which is part of our operating culture.

Because of the excellent teamwork of the men and women of this great agency - and the resolve and talent of JSO's leadership team - we will not only persevere, we will EXCEED our goal to continue with crime reductions, engage even more members of the public, and work with all of our community and citizen partners in "the good fight." I welcome your feedback!
